Summary Explanation/Background

Under certain Broward County ("County") contracts, architectural firms that are certified CBEs are required to contract with subconsultants for engineering services. All payments received by the architectural firm CBE for subconsultant engineering work are passed through directly to the subconsultant. As a result, while there may appear to be growth in the gross revenues of the architectural firm CBE, the profits of the architectural firm CBE actually remain flat or decline because the additional revenue is passed on to the engineering firms. Many times, this work is taken on by the architectural firm CBE at the request of the County in order to expedite important County projects, including those at the airport and seaport.

This proposed amendment would exclude from the calculation of average annual gross receipts to be eligible for certification as a CBE any amounts paid by an architectural firm CBE directly to a subconsultant engineering firm pursuant to a contract with the County. The change would allow the determination for eligibility to be certified as a CBE to more closely reflect the architectural firm's income for architectural services. The County has implemented a similar method to calculate the volume of work for prime contractors where the prime contractor retains CBE firms. Under current County policy, the revenues that are passed through to a CBE firm are excluded from the calculation of the prime contractor's volume of work to determine the prime contractor's ranking in procurements.
